

Tomorrow is the Last Day of Our Demonstration and Special Sale

Miss Laura Walter, the special representative from the White factory, will be here only two days more to give you lessons without charge.

In buying a "White," you buy but once in a lifetime. All other makes of sewing machines have advanced quite a bit in price. Come in and see how reasonable we are making prices on the "White" this week. Clubs on the easy-payment plan are now being formed, and you have yet time to join one.

An iron-clad guarantee goes with every "White" machine we sell.

Save that agent's profits.

Daniel Baddord, conductor on the Montpelier and Barre electric road, has resumed his duties after spending a few weeks in Hartford, Conn.

The teachers in the Barre public schools have returned from attending the state teachers' convention in Montpelier and the schools will re-open Monday morning.

About 25 friends of Miss Lillian Johnson gave her a surprise party last evening at the home of Alex Colby on Maple avenue in honor of her engagement to Henry W. Young of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Young, who has been making a brief visit in Barre, returned to Brooklyn last evening.

Goddard's football team left last night for Burlington where, this afternoon, it will meet the second team of the University of Vermont. Coach Leahy picked 18 fast men to go to Burlington. Last evening the Goddard boys were tendered a reception by boys of the fraternities. These men will appear for the red and white this afternoon, but the lien-up will not be decided until the last minute: Foster Slayton, Wood, E. Thompson, Fuller Slayton, A. Thompson, Long, McMahon, Poll, Sector, Barber, Freeman, Guy, Wilmot, Kelly, Kezer, Gaughan and Sullivan.

Considerable speculation is in the air concerning Barre's Victory arch that for three months has been an added attraction to tourists and visitors. Its huge life-like plaster symbols of honor, bravery and victory have withstood, without any material change, the elements of Vermont and still stand intact, a credit to Barre for her loyalty to veterans of the war as well as being a display of genius to produce the statuary and carvings in Barre granite. Some contend that with the weather beaten spots touched up with paint the arch could be retained until the unveiling of the substantial and permanent soldiers' memorial.

An operation was performed at the City hospital last Wednesday on the right foot of Warner Wheeler, a young man who sustained a serious injury to the foot while sliding fifteen years ago. In the accident the bones of the lower leg and foot were broken into about fifty pieces and they were put back as well as could be done. Since that time, however, the muscles and tendons have drawn so that several operations were performed to remedy the trouble and from which temporary relief was secured. But after each operation the drawing started again, having a tendency to make Mr. Wheeler walk on the outer side of the foot and causing a sore to form as well as giving great inconvenience. In the aim to give permanent relief the heel cord was cut and all the loose foot was taken off, being hoped that Mr. Wheeler's foot will take its natural position. The patient is doing well at this time.

AMUSEMENT NOTES

"My Honolulu Girl" Company Carries 35 Artists.

"My Honolulu Girl," the prettiest, most tuneful, and by far the best musical comedy sent on tour this season by those whose business it is to produce, will be the attraction at the opera house on Monday, Oct. 13. With a company of 35 artists, including one of the most captivating choruses ever gotten together, the production offers additional inducements in its scenic vestare. Neither money or work has been spared to make the stage pictures just like Rembrandt's or Corneio's. The first act showing the Royal hotel at Honolulu was painted by Charles Gordon Ford, whose stage conceptions are as popular as Charles Dana Gibson's girls. The second act, showing the beach on the island of Hilo, with a volcano in the distance, is from the brush of the famous Ender. There is just a plot in "My Honolulu Girl," not a very deep one, just strong enough to keep you wondering what is coming next. Interspersed throughout the play are some beautiful song numbers, in which the beauty chorus distinguishes itself.—adv.

CHILE DROPS HUN UNIFORM.

With German Drill Masters Gone, Army Adopts New Dress.

Another evidence of the waning influence of German kultur in the world has just come from Chile, that South American republic to the gaining of whose friendship the German foreign office of other days devoted so much thought. Chile has decided that it is about time to drop into the discard the German uniform and spiked helmet of its army, which were prescribed for it during the time German drill masters were in charge of the development of the military arm of its national service.

For some time there has been a feeling among Chileans that the Prussian type of uniform has outlived its usefulness in their country, and the minister of war has appointed a commission to consider the question, and to evolve a uniform of greater utility under local conditions.

The Chilean military uniform has undergone many changes. In the war for independence it was patterned more or less on that of the Spanish troops. Later, for many years it was of the French type. Then came the Prussian military instructors, with the prestige of the Franco-Prussian war behind them, and with them they brought the Prussian style, which has seemed out of place on men of the average build and complexion of the Chilean soldier.

Furthermore, there are other disadvantages. One Chilean newspaper, summing up the situation, said:

"Speaking frankly, the famous uniform, with its spiked helmet and all the ornaments which accompany it, have labelled us as Germans in a time in which it is not desirable to be so, apart from the fact that we ought never to carry our enthusiasm for a system to the extreme of disguising that which in all nations is the fullest expression of a nationality, the army."—New York Times.

SOCIETY CONVICTED

Along with Bert E. Kelsie on the Charge of Murder.

The refusal of the supreme court to send back for another trial Bert E. Kelsie of Orleans, convicted of the murder of James Allen, brings directly home to society the responsibility for taking the life of this grown-up child who committed a crime against the laws of the state, of which he, at least, must have a very vague idea.

Although the expert and supporting evidence went to show that Kelsie was responsible to the degree of knowing right from wrong, it seems undisputed that this is a case of arrested development; that, in brief, he is a man of 34 with the mind and reasoning power of a child. In fact, Dr. O'Neil of the state hospital, alienist, testified that his mental equipment and attainment were those of a child eight years old.

Should Kelsie, therefore, be held in the same degree responsible as a man of normal if limited mentality? Has society a right to exact from him the terrible penalty of his life when that life is so evidently imperfect and when society has undoubtedly failed to do its duty to him?

Laws, of course, cannot be enacted for one specific case, and the orderly processes of the courts must continue along accepted lines, but what shall we say to the social system that permits such units as Kelsie, who certainly must have been recognized as a defective as early as his eighth year, to roam at large without restraint or special study, until through some inexplicable atavism of his mind, he picks up the iron bar, pursues the aged man, strikes him down and robs him of his money?

When Kelsie was first convicted and sentenced to death, it is said that one of the officers asked him as he came back to the jail, how he got along. "Well, I got along a d— sight better than I thought I would," answered the child-man who had been sentenced to death in the electric chair!

When Justice Powers of the supreme court asked him if he had anything to say as to why the sentence of the law should not be passed upon him, Kelsie replied:

"I don't know as I have," and, upon the justice's repeating for his understanding that he was convicted of the murder of James Allen, Kelsie said: "Yes, sir!" Do these two trifling and from a legal standpoint—probably immaterial facts throw no light on Kelsie's mental condition and responsibility? The Herald is not for a moment questioning the conduct of the case so far as the courts and the jury are concerned, but what has society to say as to its responsibility for Kelsie and his defective mentality, blank and clear as a child's from the eighth year up, yet capable of receiving and reacting to impulses and suggestions that finally resulted in his terrible crime?

We say that it is for the purpose of discovering and segregating the Kelsies of society that the Brandon school for defective children was authorized by law; that it is to follow up and commit such children; that the board of charities and probation was created and for which purpose in part it does its work; that society, rather than retreating along such lines, must advance, and presently say to men and women who bring defective children into the world or who are themselves defective—you cannot, under Vermont law, bring upon the state the burden and menace of your imbecile or criminally ineffectual offspring! It is a bold and somewhat advanced thing to say, and the limitations of our constitution are such that we cannot perhaps go so far in that direction as some sociologists and alienists might prescribe, but even under present laws we can segregate feeble-minded girls and women, and, unless signs fail, something rather radical may be submitted to the next legislature in the way of restraining the other sex.

It would be clearly unfair and impossible to hold individuals responsible for Kelsie, but certainly the old, easy-going, not-my-neighbor's-keeper system and method must be held guilty with the unfortunate and neglected defective, whose childish mind absorbed and reacted to criminal impulses when intelligent segregation and training might have made him a fairly useful and certainly harmless member of society.

We cannot electrocute society, but certainly society is guilty with Kelsie—at least for criminal negligence.—Rutland Herald.

Now's Your Chance.

Here's a bit of timely advice from a Missouri paper: "Have you struck yet? If not, organize yourself immediately and quit work at once. In these days, with an approaching millennium apparent on all sides, no man really ought to have less than $50,000 a year, four automobiles, a summer abroad each year and winter vacation thrown in. An hour a day at, say, $100 an hour, with time and a half for overtime, is all any citizen ought to work under the new order. Walk out, anyhow. If everybody can be induced to quit work, things will prosper marvelously, and you with them."—Boston Transcript.
